In November, inflation reached 6.2%, decreasing by one percentage point per month on average

In a year-on-year comparison, the slowdown in price growth was evident in almost all 12 main items of the consumer basket. This also applied to food and non-alcoholic beverages, as well as to housing and energy, which are the most significant in terms of household expenses. Compared to October, the prices of selected types of food and newspapers and magazines increased slightly, and the prices of fuel became lower.

Year-on-year inflation continued to slow down for the ninth month, consumer prices were higher by 6.2% in November than a year ago. Until the summer of this year, inflation exceeded the level of 10%. In recent years, price growth has slowed down by an average of one percentage point every month. In a month-on-month comparison, consumer prices of goods and services rose again only slightly, by 0.2%.
